through faith in god and science, unlimited courage and tenacity you have won the admiration, respect and love of your friends, colleagues and teachers. What a wonderful and great feeling is to win when the chances to win were minimal.
your noble behaviour was not only that of a man according to ideals of rudyard kipling, but also and above all that of a great toubib.

...and we thought the war would be over two years later. today, it seems it will never end.

well, we did finish this book, don't ask us how, and this year it's different. some might think it's a complete chaos. we just believe it's more realistic and also more fun. ten years from now, these pictures will only recive the good old days, or maybe the bad old days of lebanon in the early 80's.

drs. george fawwaz, afif mufarrij and fuad sabra were also kind enough to tell us something about their old days that might seem more enjoyable and surely more peaceful then ours.

for those who think they're under-photographed, forgive us; we're sure those who were over-photographed won't mind. and believe us we tried to get everyone, including those who were not around and some of the people who left us during the past two years, we hope we will still reach them thru this album. enjoy it.

medical dean's message for the «toubib», academic year

the term for physician in the arabic language is «tabeeb» or «tabeebeh», but the word more often than not used in our society is «hakeem» or «hakeemeh». the latter means: wise man or woman, a sage, a judicious person. the traditional usage of the word as opposed to the usage of «tabeeb and tabeebeh» in connection with physicians suggests respect for and trust in their persons, not only because of their power to heal but also because of the attributes of character of which they are possessed, their good judgement, their prudence and wisdom in practicing their art and in their dealings with people. this designation gives physicians a choice position in our culture and society. it also increases their responsibility towards their fellow human beings because of the implied confidence placed in their medical knowledge and personal traits of character.

i like to think that the hippocratic oath which is publicly taken by all graduating doctors of medicine is an overt expression of qualities which are inherent in their innermost selves, a summary of convictions which stem from within and are not imposed from without. i like to think of the oath as a creed personally and spontaneously adopted by each of our medical students and graduates, and not as a set of ethical values which are only incanted in ritual form at the end of each academic year.

it is, therefore, my earnest wish that all of you continue to live up to these values in relation to your colleagues, teachers, fellow students; patients, and above all, to yourselves. it is my earnest wish that you live up to the mark of esteem, trust and confidence which is placed in you by the members of our society when they call you: «hakeem, hakeemeh.»

"Gaudeamus igitur iuvenes dum sumus"

so begins the classical student song in european universities. it means: let us then be merry while we are youthful. the beautiful melody goes back to the middle of the eighteenth century and has been immortalized by johannes brahms who orchestrated it to conclude with it his academic festival overture with much grandeur instead of appropriate humor. i believe haydn or mozart, being southern germans, would have done a better job: brahms was born in hamburg!

why was the student song written in latin? until recently, latin was the language of learning in europe; and when professor christian thomasius, leipzig, started to lecture in german at the beginning of the 18th century he was considered a revolutionary, even a heretic. schopenhauer (1788-1860) wrote his books in german, yet when he quoted a greek author he translated the quotation into latin, the assumption being that a cultured person ought to know latin. some european universities still require greek and latin or at least latin, for immatriculation. the contributions of the ancients to art, literature, and philosophy constitute one of the cornerstones of modern western culture. some renowned scientists go so far as to state that the process of scientific thinking, the formulation of scientific questions or even the linking of scientific theory to practice would not have been possible without greek philosophy. werner heisenberg stated in 1949 that his thinking as an atomic physicist was greatly influenced by the fact that he went through a humanistic gymnasium in which he had an opportunity to study plato and greek natural philosophy and that the same thing was true of max planck who studied at the same gymnasium in munich. when you consider that planck and heisenberg were two of the giants of physics in the 20th century, you realize how much one can miss by not studying the ancients in high school. i have often wondered how much we missed by not being able to read homer and sophocles in the original greek, or cicero and virgil in latin. if i live long enough, i still hope to learn latin! latin grammar is an exercise in thinking.

you may ask: how can a medical student be merry with all the quizzes, final examinations and the national board examinations awaiting him? nobody can understand this question better than i do. fact is, i never enjoyed my student life for this very reason, and examinations were a sword of damocles that hung over my head from october till june. not that i cared for grades more than other students did, but i was taught to be thorough. thoroughness then meant reading footnotes and solving all problems and exercises printed in the textbooks! merriment started for me when the final examinations were happily concluded. i then secured all the books that would keep me busy during summer. you can read more books than throughout the school year and with greater avidity and interest, precisely because this material was not required for examinations. it is a mistake to think that my reading was confined to novels although i read such writers as dickens, thackeray, jane austen etc. shakespeare i read almost from a till z. but i read also science books that required much concentration, and even books on public health and preventive medicine, as i was one of the founders of the so-called village welfare service movement that started in 1933 under the leadership of the late professors dodd and close. one thing i did not read was al-hasna' or al-hawadith!.

the greater part of the daily 24 hours was spent in a nest (irzal) built in one of the old almond trees in the garden, from branches of poplars, oleander – remember it contains a digitalis – like substance! – and laurels. the rest of the 24 hours was spent in hiking – that once took us to the top of mt. hermon, swimming in the roaring litany river some 400 meters vertically distant from the village, hunting partridges in the rugged hills of jabal amil, and riding horses in our spacious marj richly endowed with fountains – hence the name marjayoun. unlike the situation in kura, the litany gorge invites strong westerly winds from the sea that sets the whole tree in motion and lulls you to sleep at night. all the trees in the neighborhood rage in the storm – the eucalyptus, the zinzalacht, the pine – and each tree contributes its characteristic tune to the symphony of nature. even the constant barking of dogs does not disturb your sleep; they bark either for no reason at all or in response to the howling of jackals. as a child, i asked my mother why the jackals haunt the village every evening and she told me a story that would fascinate konrad lorentz since it confirms his theory that dogs are tamed jackals. my mother's tale: «once upon a time a jackal fell ill with malaria and his brothers brought him to your father for treatment. your father gave him daily injections of quinine for a whole week, as the jackal could not learn how to swallow cachets intact. we took good care of the jackals, so they decided to stay on after their patient was cured. they eventually became dogs. however, to this very day the other members of their tribe of jackals come every evening to the out-skirts of the village and shout to their fellows: «has your patient recovered?» (tab maridkum?) and the dogs bark back «lah, lah» (no, no).»

back to medical education. education is that which remains after all the facts are gone. it is a certain attitude that you acquire. yet with this attitude alone you can not handle a patient that is rushed into the emergency room certain basic facts have to be learned and retained, although these are much less than we require you to know in order to pass our examinations, especially the national board examinations, for which i wish to offer you my humble apology. yet there is time to do all this if you plan your daily work properly and not postpone your reading till the last day before the examination. the noble roman philosopher seneca described one aspect of our inconsistency with ourselves thus: «we all of us complain of the shortness of time and yet have much more than we know what to do with. we are always complaining our day are few, and acting as though there would be no end to them.» young people know that they are certain to die, yet the time of departure looms so far away that they do not even contemplate the possibility of death. schopenhauer likened life to a journey from one valley to another, across a mountain ridge. only after the middle of life, when the traveller has reached the mountain crest, does the valley of death beneath him become visible. let us be merry while we are young! gaudeamus igitur!

life is composed of 2 parts; that which is past-a dream, and i hope a dream realized, and that which is to come a wish. as you start your graduate medical education, which is primarily designed to prepare you for entrance into a specific field of medicine, i wish you the very best of luck. one saw life as a dream another as a struggle and still another as a solemn commitment. i do hope you will follow the latter.

basically your program will consist of patient care, continued study, teaching of undergraduates (medical students and nurses) and research. all these activities you must serve with equal devotion. keeping in mind the following:

- a. a true professional cannot but be a constant student.
- b. it is by teaching that we teach ourselves, by relating that we observe, by affirming that we examine, by showing that we look, by writing that we think, by pumping that we draw water into the well. «amiel». also remember «we teach a little by what we say» we teach more by what we do but we teach most by what we are».
- c. longfellow's words: the heights by great men reached and kept, were not attained by sudden flight, but they, while their companions slept, were toiling upward in the night.
- d. develop the spirit of fellowship which is a companionship of good companions drawn together, bound together, and sharing together a love and admirations of their life's work; togetherness (a good work too).
- e. «coming together is a beginning; keeping is progress; working together is success.»
- f. «if a man does only what is required of him, he is a slave. the moment he does more he is a free man.»

and in this age of science, the successful study and practice of medicine requires many attributes, among them integrity, intelligence, common sense, scientific skill, personal stability, dedication to the ideal of service, and the ability to inspire and maintain confidence.

things to remember: the value of time, the success of perseverance; the pleasure of working, the dignity of simplicity, the worth of character, the power of kindness, the influence of examples, the obligation of duty, the wisdom of economy, the virtue of patience, the sound of laughter, the joy of originating, and the thrill of seeing it through.

i would like to quote a guide for your new year.
and i said to the man who stood at the gate of the year: give me a light that i may tread safely into the unknown. and he replied: go out into the darkness and put thine hand into the hand of god. that shall be to thee better than light, and safer than a known way.

finally i like to end by a stanza by mallory in «la mort d'arthur». the old order changes yielding place to new and the lord fulfills himself in many ways lest one good custom

in 1924, i was given an english poem to recite at the ceremony of my high school graduation. the title of the poem was: «i remember, i remember», and this awakened in me reminiscences of childhood, in my home village bishmizzine, that beautiful make-up. now, at this stage of my life, i have so much to remember of the events and experiences of the long years i have spent in the study for, and the practice of my profession.

one morning, our professor of clinical pathology surprised us by saying: «i have been experimenting for sometime, to verify a new test of pregnancy, recently described; i found out that i was pregnant and not the pregnant women. it is definitely unreliable.» at that time, the medical students had to submit a thesis to the faculty, in partial fulfilment of the requirement for the degree of doctor in medicine. this thesis did not need to be original, but should be well organized and should include experimental work.

the aim of this requirement was to acquaint students with the «scientific method» and the procedures in research work.

in my readings, thereafter, i came across a short fine print note describing a test of pregnancy by aschheim and zondek in germany. anyway, this aroused my interest and i chose it as my thesis for m.d. after more than one year of experimentation which showed that this test was 100 percent correct, it was accepted by the faculty and introduced to our hospital as an official test of pregnancy; this was in 1931.

previous to the era of anti bacterial drugs, the practice of medicine was of limited help to the patient and was very depressing to the physician. two of our prominent professors succumbed to a septicemic infection caused by minor skin wounds. it was a real shock to the medical school.

after i graduated in 1931, i joined the department of anatomy and we got deeply interested in septicemia and took up as our problem of research «ultra violet irradiation of the blood stream in septicemia». we experimented untiringly, for a number of years, and our results were published in the journal of the «proceedings of the society for experimental biology and medicine» in 1939. but, about this time, there appeared in medical literature, articles announcing the discovery of the chemical anti-bacterial sulfa drugs, a much easier and more practical way of treating infections.

i remember the first case i have treated with an antibacterial sulfa (trade name daganan, a sulfapyridine) was a very sick patient with double lobar pneumonia. few tablets of a free sample that i had in my medical bag put him on the safe side within twelve hours. a new era in medicine had begun. what a blessing!! bacteria, then, were very susceptible to these drugs, quite different from those of today.

during the world war II, when a fierce fighting was fighting on our land between the english army in khaldeh on one side and the french army in hadath on the other side, i was called to see a very sick child in shweifaf. first i hesitated to go; the bombing was actually over our heads, but i paused for a moment, remembered my medical oath, then whole-heartedly i went up to shweifaf crossing the fire line. while examining the seriously ill child one the bombs fell just next to the house and what a moment of panic, all the people around me ran away and for a while i was left alone with the drowsy patient. ever since that time i was anxious to know what happened to that child. about 3 to 4 years ago, in the elevator of the a.u.h. a handsome young man saluted me and talked to me, this was the sick child of shweifaf!!

i would like to end with the following points:

what you learn as students is simply a foundation for the edifice of your career. medical sciences are growing fast. do not lag behind and remember that the greatest thinks have not yet been done, awaiting the coming of the great men and women.

a good doctor should be a master of «scientific methods» and he cannot go above the level of his knowledge of basic sciences.

in the various fields of clinical medicine, inspite of all the sophisticated technology and the highly developed laboratory tests, there is nothing, that takes the place of a meticulous and diligent physical examination and this is not attained except through a sound knowledge of the human morphology.

let us remember that it is our right to live but our duty is to enrich life.

la représentation des cations et des anions, 1 mEq = 20 mm sur les diagonales du carré, comptés à partir des angles du carré.

Ainsi que nous l'avons développé le long de ce rapport, la température de l'eau est remarquablement constante ; la résistivité, le pH et la composition chimique de l'eau varient dans les limites qui restent très inférieures aux normes admises par la législation française concernant les eaux minérales.

L'expérimentation clinique chez le rat, menée à Bordeaux par le Professeur CANELLAS, a prouvé l'effet de diurèse hydrique incontestable de l'eau d'Aïn-Sohat, confirmant ainsi sa renommée ancienne.

L'ensemble de nos études et des faits que nous venons de rapporter permet de considérer l'eau d'Aïn-Sohat comme une eau minérale dans le sens où l'entend la législation française. Cette eau semble présenter toutes les garanties exigibles pour une exploitation et elle est promise à un bel avenir.

LE TEMOIGNAGE DE BORDEAUX... OU CE QUE L'ON APPELLE UNE EAU BENEFIQUE.

SOHAT, eau d'une pureté incomparable, légère et digeste a, lors des tests effectués à la Faculté de Médecine de Bordeaux, démontré sans conteste ses effets diurétiques et stimulants pour les reins de même que son action éliminatrice des toxines du métabolisme.

Ce sont ces effets bénéfiques à côté de nombreuses autres qualités, qui confèrent à SOHAT, l'appellation contrôlée d'EAU MINERALE NATURELLE.

sohat est mise en bouteilles avec la collaboration technique de vittel - France.
