JOSEPH J. McDONALD, M.D., D.M.Sc.

Dean of the Faculty of Medical Sciences

Teaching of Public Health specialties at the A. U. B. was initiated eight years ago after careful planning by several hard-working individuals. Now young men and women may receive training as public health administrators, sanitary engineers, hospital administrators, public health nurses, health educators, laboratory technicians and sanitarians.

You have come from many countries with the common aim of fulfilling a purpose. Your teachers have given you the fundamentals and principles necessary in your respective fields. With the knowledge that you have acquired you will be able to contribute, along with other specialists in the health sciences, to the welfare of your environment.

Statistics show that more and more public health workers are needed. Concerted effort on your part is important for useful work in your communities. Patience, perseverance, hard work and diligence are essential to keep up with the rapid growth of scientific methods and their application.

It will be a pleasure for your professors to learn about your work wherever you may be. Congratulations and best wishes.

LELAND E. POWERS, M.D., M.S.P.H.

Director, School of Public Health and Associate Dean
Faculty of Medical Sciences

Sound programs of public health cannot be implemented without the resources of competently trained and experienced professional health personnel. As each graduate of A.U.B.'s School of Public Health returns to his own country, he carries with him greater professional competence and is himself the means of extending the blessing of healthy living. I hope that each of this year's graduates will never falter in this great responsibility to help his fellow-man and to push back the frontiers of disease. In this, I send with you all my heartiest wishes of success in your work.

Dr. Azar submitted for publication the results of this interesting study on rectal infection with Schistosoma hematobium in South Africa and Drs. Schwabe and Schinazi have continued their work on host-parasite relationships in echinococcosis. In conjunction with Dr. Asmar of the School of Agriculture, the epidemiologic survey on leptospirosis was continued as was that on systemic mycoses being undertaken by Drs. Daoud and Schwabe. Again this year departmental research benefited from financial support from the United States Public Health Service and Charles Pfizer and Company.

Although everything was prepared for the summer field training work, but due to the unfortunate events in the country, we had to send the foreign students back to their respective countries. The Lebanese and the Nepali sanitarians with the laboratory technicians were kept to have their field training in the university.

Although the field training was interrupted, we can say it was a successful year and we wish our students all good luck.

STUDENT

CULTURAL AND SOCIAL

ACTIVITIES

In the following pages there are several pictures of student activities. Originally, it was planned to print the pictures of each division on a separate sheet. However, due to the shortage of time as a result of holding the field training activities this year outside Lebanon, it was not possible to do everything as was planned. But if we take it from a public health point of view it represents a better over-all team participation.

Another thing that is omitted this year is that we do not have any pictures for the summer field training. This was not possible to obtain in time to include in the Yearbook.

These pictures show quite a number of activities which included a number of cultural trips. One major successful trip was the organized trip to Egypt with the students of the Education Department. There were a number of trips sponsored by the Students' Society. One was to the Rabbits' Island, another to the Cedars - all of which were within the Lebanon. Sports activities were quite numerous, as foot-ball games with other schools in the University as well as games within the School of Public Health. Parties also took unique place in the School life this year, though they were not often held, Students' activities were climaxed by the "Farewell Party" held at West Hall in June, after which the whole student body returned to their countries to complete their field training there.

CO-OPERATION: THE KEY TO SUCCESS

Neither oil nor the installations required for its production and transportation are of value unless they can be put to use efficiently. In addition to capital, it is the human element that counts in the oil business. Without expert engineers, geologists, drillers, pipeliners, refiners and marketers, all working together harmoniously, the oil industry would cease to progress and prosper and the whole world would suffer.
